1,500 Hear Adkins Denounce Bailey in Courthouse Speech

Plays Road Allotments, Refunding, and "Shakedown"

COURTYARD RALLY

Large Turnout Hears Gubernatorial Issues Discussed

Fifteen hundred persons gathered on the Hempstead courthouse lawn and in cars parked on adjoining streets here Saturday night to hear Homer Adkins launch a many-pointed attack against Governor Carl Bailey in their campaign for the chief executive post in the state.

Mr. Adkins hit at the governor with charges of discrimination in the allocation of highway funds, unreasonable delay in obtaining refunding of the road debt, and the putting of political pressure on the public schools, state university, and state welfare organizations.

It was the first political rally to be held from the magnificent front steps of Hempstead county's new $200,000 courthouse. The columnar lights on either side of the building's entrance threw their rays over the crowd gathered on the lawn. Mr. Adkins spoke from the north side of the staircase, a sound-trunk broadcasting his voice for blocks.

The gubernatorial candidate was introduced by Lawrence Martin, with John Vesey, county manager for Mr. Adkins as program chairman.

Mr. Adkins departed from his prepared address to say that southwest Arkansas had been discriminated against in the matter of highways, referring to Highways 29 and 4 as, "The should be renamed the highways of broken promises." He said if elected governor he would have the State Highway Commission give immediate consideration to these roads.

After reviewing briefly his own life, from his birth on a Pulaski county farm, Mr. Adkins launched into his prepared text.

The Public Schools
"I realize that the public school system of Arkansas is a subject too big for any one man, especially a layman, to solve," he said. "Therefore I pledge that immediately after my nomination in August, I shall appoint an educational committee composed of six or eight of the leading school people and laymen from over the state who will give their time and thought to the preparation of a detailed program along this line. And when their program is completed, I shall do all in my power to secure its adoption."

"To this committee I shall say that Arkansas can afford to spend more money for its children. The 1937-38 income for each man, woman, child and infant in the state of Arkansas was $211.36. Out of this individual income there was taken for the support of the public schools for one year $6.12 or 51 cents a month. In my opinion the financial status of the public school system at the present time is not due to the lack of taxes levied for educational purposes. Inefficiency in assessments and collections, both in ad valorem and special taxes; and because of improper budgeting and handling of expenditures of school funds."

"I believe that it is far more necessary for us to turn our attention to reforming these faults than it is to devoting our time to discover new items to tax and I pledge my service in improving the administration of the laws which govern the assessment, collection and distribution of school funds."

The Refunding Issue
"You are going to hear a great deal about the state highway indebtedness refunding in this campaign. I am heartily in favor of refunding — as is

MEETING MONDAY

Petitions to Be Submitted to the City for Action

The consumers committee announced Monday noon it held signed petitions of 50.3 per cent of the gas consumers of Hope—slightly more than a majority—calling on the city government to wage a fight for lower gas rates and pledging to that fight any rebate that might be given consumers by the Arkansas Louisiana Gas company.

Winding up their solicitation the six local girls who have been circulating the petitions produced 52 additional names during Monday morning, making the total signatures at noon 656.

Hope had 1,198 active gas meters as of June 30, and 106 meters which had been discontinued for the summer—a total of 1,304 meters.

McMath and Young
At a special meeting of Mayor W. S. Atkins and the city council Saturday the council elected Aldermen Syd McMath and E. P. Young as the council's representatives on the consumers committee. The three members originally chosen at the mass meeting July 23 were, Albert Graves, State Senator James H. Pilkinton, and Alex H. Washburn, who with the two councilmen, will make up a five-man committee to arrange for attorneys, engineers and other plans for the rate fight.

The full committee is meeting in executive session at 5 p. m. Monday. While the six girls who made the original petition canvass have completed their work, additional names will be obtained this week. Persons wishing to sign and not yet contacted may do so at The Star office.

For the first time in recent years Hempstead county political aspirants used the last day of the week as a stump date when they spoke at Patmos Saturday to a comparatively small crowd.

With Oscar T. Rider acting as chairman the meeting was opened by the four men seeking the office of circuit clerk. In the following order, each made a short announcement: Cecil Weaver, Arthur C. Anderson, Elmer Brown and J. B. Byers. Ex-sheriff J. E. Bearden seeking the No. 2 representative post was the next to take the speakers stand. As he had indicated at Shover Springs on Friday night he launched an attack on his opponent, Royce Weisenberger, incumbent.

Bearden Opens
At the outset Mr. Bearden said that he wanted to refute a rumor that he was merely running for this office in order to "kill a couple of years" then come back here and run again for Hempstead county sheriff in 1942.

"There is nothing personal in this fight," said Mr. Bearden. "This is an attack against the record made by the young red-headed country boy

Defense Move for Mistrial Denied by Federal Judge

Fourteen Counts on Sherman Are Dropped

TRIAL CONTINUES

J. Hugh Wharton Is Called As Witness Monday

FORT SMITH — (AP) A defense motion for a mistrial in the government's liquor conspiracy case now being heard in the U. S. District Court here was denied Monday by Judge Heartsill Ragon.

Shortly afterward the court rejected motions for a directed verdict of acquittal for four of the defendants, State Revenue Commissioner Z. M. McCarroll, Deputy Commissioner Butler Toland, Attorney Joe House and Dave Sherman, Little Rock wholesaler, sought on the grounds that the government which closed its case on Saturday failed to show that the defendants conspired with Southwest Distilled Products, Inc., in transporting liquor into dry states.

Judge Ragon, however, directed dismissal of 14 counts of the indictment so far as Toland is concerned, leaving the deputy commissioner on trial on only one count of conspiracy.

The others remained on trial on 15 counts.

J. Hugh Wharton, former revenue department attorney, was called as the first witness.

Defense Asks for Verdict

FORT SMITH — (AP) — The question of what would be done about the partial testimony of George Dixon, important government witness who became ill Tuesday after taking the stand in the liquor conspiracy trial of four Little Rock men remained undecided over the weekend.

The attorney for State Revenue Commissioner Z. M. McCarroll, one of the four defendants, said that the defense would seek a directed verdict of acquittal for all four when court convenes Monday morning.

Attorney Joe K. Mahony of El Dorado said the defense will contend that government evidence failed to establish any conspiracy involving the four—McCarroll, Deputy Commissioner Butler Toland, Attorney Joe W. House and Dave Sherman, liquor wholesaler.

District Attorney C. R. Barry, after closing the government's case Saturday moved to strike from the record Dixon's unfinished testimony. Dixon has been in hospital here since Tuesday, and Barry told the court there seemed to be no possibility of him returning to the stand.

Defense attorneys objected that they could not concur in the motion to strike "at this time."

Judge Ragon said the defense's position "presents a new situation to the court." He instructed both sides to submit authorities on the subject by Monday morning.

SERIAL STORY SUMMER THEATER

BY MILDRED WILLIAMS

COPYRIGHT, 1940,
NEA SERVICE, INC.

CHAPTER I

JOHNNY REGAN'S hand, jingling the coins in the pocket of his bush coat, closed suddenly over Jean Reynolds' last letter.

He took it out and read it again, trying to form in his mind a polite reply, something saying firmly that he thought she was a swell girl but that they had both better give up the idea of orange blossoms, wedding bells, and a two-room apartment in Boston. He would tell her he intended spending the summer on the Cape, keeping shop for his friend, Ned Walters, while Ned was in Canada. Perhaps, here on their old stamping ground he would be able to survey his life, to find out what had happened to their love affair.

But Jean's impulsive, upright scrawl starting at him from the beautifully monogrammed stationery didn't help matters:

"Darling," he read, "What on earth happened? Dad is furious. Jobs, he says, don't grow on bushes. Not one 1940 graduate in 700 could have walked into a job as good as the one he offered you. But you don't have to take his old job, if you don't want to. I told him so. Going to bat for you as usual. I love you so terribly. But for you to leave without a word to me. That hurt, truly it did."

Johnny crumpled the note and threw it into the empty grate. He went to the door of his shop and looked out on the clean strip of blue sea before him, watched the gulls dipping like graceful waves in the sky. Why had he come to Cape Cod, of all places? The Cape, where he and Jean had spent summer after summer, playing together? Where every landscape reminded him of something they had shared.

Illustrated by H. C. Schlensker.

Johnny's throat contracted as he stared at her. This was the girl he had known in his dreams. He was in love. "I'd like to borrow an old lamp for the set in our next play," she said.

"Noogans" Whip Travelers Twice

Willie Duke of Chattanooga Gets Eight Hits

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — Rufe Hooks hit a home run over the right field fence with one on base to win a 5-to-4 thriller for the Lookouts to complete a sweep of a double-header with Little Rock Sunday.

The first game score was 3 to 2. Earl Boyard broke this up in the twelfth inning with a single. It was the third straight inning that Little Rock walked a Lookout at second. On the other two times, once a Boyard's expense, their strategy worked.

Crip Polli pitched careful ball over the distance to gain the decision over Bob Katz.

Duke Hits Well

Willie Duke had another big day against Chattanooga. He finished the series with eight hits in 13 trips, knocked in a run and doubled so that he could score himself in the first game, and had the Lookouts beaten almost single-handed in the final. He again knocked in the first run and doubled so he could score again.

Germans Continue Raids on Britain

Loss of the Destroyer Wren is Reported

By The Associated Press

English skies throbbed with the sound of aerial dogfights Monday as the powerful German air force, repelled with losses in a sunrise raid on the southeast coast, sent hundreds of planes against inland objectives. Throughout the day Britain's air forces, men and anti-aircraft batteries battled the high flying Nazi invaders.

British officially fixed German losses in the sunrise at 15 downed planes and indicated the total might run higher. The unofficial total reached 23.

In London the admiralty announced the loss of the 1,120 ton destroyer Wren July 27.

On the Balkan diplomatic front it indicated that official quarters at Bucharest, Rumania, are willing to cede the narrow strip, Transylvania to Hungary, which claims the province as historic Magyar soil.

LONDON. —(AP)— Seventeen Nazi airbases in Germany, Holland, Belgium, northern France, oil depots and docks in Germany were bombed by the Royal Air force in operations Sunday night, the air ministry announced Monday night.

Coaches Say It Is Not Too Early for Footballers to Get Down to Business Weight, and Their Light, Sensible Training Program Won't Hurt Anybody

By HARRY GRAYSON

NEA Service Sports Editor

Even grandstand quarterbacks can get something out of training instructions designed by football coaches to assure players an early start toward a successful season and to lessen the risk of injuries.

"Don't be foolish enough to believe you can get into condition after practice starts," George S. Halas writes the professional Chicago Bears. "If you fail to report in shape you not only handicap yourself in your efforts to make the team, but you seriously retard the progress of the squad as a whole. The well-conditioned player seldom injured. Fatigue, the result of poor conditioning, is responsible for most football injuries."

Coaches agree that baseball, or a combination of golf and tennis, or golf and handball are the ideal football conditioners.

ming, which develops an entirely different set of muscles.

All suggest the out-of-doors and sunshine, but do not recommend swimmer's set of muscles.

"A good coat of tan is important," Dutch Clark tells the Cleveland Rams. "It indicates a player has soaked up plenty of ultra-violet ray, which increases resistance against colds, toughens the skin and rejuvenates the body."

Sore feet and sunburn, caused by players failing to expose themselves gradually and sensibly to the sun before practice starts, are troublesome training problems.

Sound feet and nine hours sleep daily at regular intervals are the most important conditioning items. It goes without saying that bad habits must be avoided.

The men are urged to concentrate on ankle, knee and foot calisthenics.

Dancing is all right, but think of the hours hiking and running, particularly sprinting, are better.

Players are advised to work out barefooted, if necessary, but in football shoes whenever possible. They are warned against wearing heavy woolen socks next to the skin during hot weather. Light cotton socks are better. They should be changed and washed after each workout. The feet should be washed and dried carefully.

Klondike Kate's Scenes of Glory

Are Now Only Ashes of Former Gold Rush Days

AP Feature Service

DAWSON, Y. T.—The Queen of the North in the rip-roaring gold rush days, "Klondike Kate," found her house of memories gone when she returned north this summer.

The friendly, white-haired woman with the same sparkling blue eyes that one were the toast of the North, now Mrs. Kate Matson, came back to visit her husband, a mining man.

But the theater that had rung with applause for her at the turn of the century had burned, with several other landmarks, this spring.

"It's going to leave vacant place in my heart," she said. "It was a place where I walked with my memories."

The man she was to marry first saw her there on Christmas Eve, 1900, but thirty-one years later he read a newspaper story about her, and wrote her. It was another two years still before they were married.

Matson remained in the north with his mining properties but Mrs. Matson came out summers to live at Bend, Ore. "Dawson" Matson said, "Is no place for a woman." She was injured in an automobile accident in 1937 and this was her first trip north since.

"I feel as happy as any sourdough should feel about coming home," she exulted.

Summer Baths Aid the Beauty Too

The Best-Looking Self Is Revealed by Scrubbing

By BETTY CLARKE

AP Feature Service Writer
The extra baths you take this summer can mean extra beauty to it if it's not simply that you feel cooler and a bath. Nor just matter of relaxing. The scrubbing helps reveal your best-looking self.

The bath-beautifying that counts most is cleansing your skin thoroughly and using brisk massage to help increase circulation. The message helps bring to the surface the excess oil of summer perspiration. Scrubbing takes it away from the surface. The result can be a baby-fine skin.

When you massage your face, be sure to use upward motions always, whether you're applying cream with your fingers or using a soft but sudsy brush. Careful rinsing is important, too.

The best way to get extra circulation for the face without touching it is to massage your back well. Most of the blood vessels that feed your face go through your back. A back brush, well soaped, will do the trick. Or there's an easy homemade massager that is nothing more than a long piece of fairly heavy cloth to which handles are sewed to make it easier for you to pull it back and forth. That gives a pink look to but doesn't irritate sensitive skin. If you have been neglecting your back, it's a good idea to start with the cloth friction before using a brush. Your back brush can come in for scrubbing elbows, knees and heels to keep them in the pink too. And don't forget the nails, toes and hands.

If you take a quick shower in the morning, turn your evening bath into a 20-minute relaxation tubbing. Warm water is recommended in both cases by doctors who insist here again moderation is best, not only for comfort and coolness, but for health, too. A water softener may help you relax more quickly.

When you finish your bath, apply summer colognes that have woody or flower scents and dust your feet with deodorant powder. Massaging them at the end of the day with a mentholated cream or oil helps relieve aching, but be sure to wipe away excess with a towel before putting your shoes on again.

Foreign Colonies Policy Agreed on

Pan - American Conference Nears Historic Decision

HAVANA (AP)—The "act of Havana" was unanimously reported by the Peace Commission over the weekend for formal adoption by the American foreign ministers to create an inter-continental "Monroe Doctrine" machinery for its application against any foreign invader or land-grabbing conqueror.
The document, which many believe may become historically as important as the old Monroe doctrine itself, marked success of United States Secretary of State Hull in his efforts to gain the moral if not material support of the other 20 American republics for any measures the United States might take concerning European possessions in this hemisphere in the interests of continental defense.

The combined declaration and resolution called the "act of Havana"—a companion to a convention which requires ratification by two-thirds of the nations to become operative—makes it the right and duty of one or more American countries to act in any emergency to prevent other foreign powers from gaining a foothold in the American colonies of vanquished European nations.

This in effect, means that the United States would be assured in advance that the other American republics would approve of steps taken under the Monroe Doctrine.

There's a mile of wire in a window screen, but it could hardly be termed the last mile, for we find those same mosquitoes walking through it again and again.

Studios Now Tone Down Export Versions to Save South American Exhibitors

HOLLYWOOD — From two individual sources which ordinarily I'd consider reliable, this department has heard that Germany "is censoring American pictures in three South American countries, and that the governments have agreed tacitly to suppress any films disapproved by Nazi diplomatic representatives."

The situation seems a little overstated. The U. S. Department of Commerce doesn't know about it, anyway, and the Producers' Association denies it.
All the same, I'm pretty sure that this has had a lot to do with the movies' quick swing away from anti-Nazi subjects. There is some proof in the current Claudette Colbert-Ray Milland picture, "Arise My Love".
The story is based somewhat on the experience of Harold Dahl, the American flyer who, captured and condemned by General Franco, was saved by the plea of his beautiful wife, from there on, though, the character of the wife seems to be modeled after Dorothy Thompson. Anyway, the comedy proceeds to more recent events, and it ribs the Nazis. And almost every reference to Germany or Hitler is being filmed in two versions—one definitely anti-Nazi, the other with most of the sting removed. The latter will be used in South America.

The studio says this is being done merely out of consideration for exhibitors on the lower continent. Feeling is so strong among the Latin bloods that any strong reference to Nazis, either for or against, raises uproar in the theaters.

Brake Home and Bank
The colony is chucking at the frankly told difficulties of a prominent actor whose wife recently left him with the intention of suing for divorce. With the breaking up of their home, says the actor, his mother-in-law agreed to take care of the details of closing the house and paying off the servants. So he gave her a signed check with amount blank—and she took his entire bank account.
Until recently, when he went off contract at one studio, the actor had been working steadily for several years and had deposited quite a lot of cash. Yet, when he began a picture on another lot the other day, he had to borrow eating money for the week! And his wife's family are wealthy!

One For Jeanette
Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy are co-starring in "Bittersweet." Recording a song for the picture, Eddy gurgled a couple of notes and spoiled a take. "Where's 'Allan Jones'?" asked W. S. Van Dyke, the director. "Is he busy right now?"
"Maybe we could get him," said Miss MacDonald. "But how about Lawrence Tibbett, I'm sure."
"Now you've got something!" exclaimed Eddy. "Tibbett and Grace Moore—the perfect team for this picture!"
There's a strong indication of the new order of practical picture-making in a move by Warner Brothers which will be a local sensation: The studio is going to fire Paul Muni and Director William Dieterle. This is not a mere refusal to renew contracts. The stellar actor and director are being ousted before their contracts have expired and will be given settlements.

Both men were regarded as too dogged, arty and argumentative and temperamental. Muni always raised Cain about his scripts and has insisted on changes which hurt his pictures at the box office. Currently he has been making trouble about "High Sierra," slated for his next flicker. Dieterle has refused to direct numerous stories, and in turn has fought for stories which the studio didn't like.

Pentecostal Meet Is Begun Sunday

Rev. T. A. Sweatt to Conduct 3 Week Revival

The revival at First Pentecostal church began with a large attendance Sunday, the pastor, the Rev. W. O. Graves reported. Interest is expected to mount steadily throughout the campaign.

The Rev. T. A. Sweatt of Louisiana, who is conducting the three weeks revival, spoke on "The Power of Thought on Our Spiritual Standing," in the opening address Sunday. The Rev. Mr. Sweatt will use many subjects of interest throughout the meet.

The public is invited.

A Nazi Studies Pre-War

Britain in 'English Air'
Most striking and most important in D. E. Stevenson's "The English Air" (Farrar and Rinehart; $2.50) is the comparison of British and German characters, before and immediately following the outbreak of the war. Significant, too, is the note of confidence upon which Miss Stevenson ends her story—a faith not in accord with developments subsequent to Feb. 28, 1940.

"The English Air" is not the heavy and dull story one might anticipate. Rather, it is a light and pleasant story of a Nazi, Franz von Heiden, who is sent by his German father to England ostensibly to visit his British cousins, actually to observe the British temperament.

Franz finds conditions far different than in his homeland. There is no display of uniforms, no crushing domination of police and military, no restrictions on a free and easy life. He is amazed that the English laugh and joke so readily; scorn, apparently, law and restraint; that they can joke with their king as he confers a medal upon a hero. But he learns, too, that they have serious moments; that Wynne, the cousin he loves, is a leader in youth movements, that in event of war the British would obey, gladly.

Returning home, Franz contrasts the privation and regimentation of Nazi Germany with democratic liberty, joins a secret group seeking Hitler's overthrow. As a secret broadcaster, he has many narrow escapes from the Gestapo. Finally, when Germany becomes too dangerous for him, he is brought back to Britain, parachutes to a Scottish moor.

The end finds Franz—not Franz, in a move by Warner Brothers which will be a local sensation: The studio is going to fire Paul Muni and Director William Dieterle. This is not a mere refusal to renew contracts. The stellar actor and director are being ousted before their contracts have expired and will be given settlements.

Man in Charge Promises Lists Will Be Secret

WASHINGTON — Nation-wide registration to aliens beginning Aug. 27 will be neither a glorified hunt nor a means of compiling a black list by which super patriots can chase foreign-born workers out of their jobs, if the man who is running the show has anything to say about it.

This man is Earl G. Harrison, a youth all-looking Republican lawyer from Philadelphia, who is working until midnight five or six nights a week preparing the machinery which will make the names, finger prints and personal histories of from three to six million people part of the official records of the U. S. government.

Big idea is to find out exactly how many aliens there are in the country, where they came from, what they are doing and who they are. A good many liberals have been worried about the uses to which all of this data may be put. Here is Harrison's answer.

"The full extent of the government's policy hasn't been worked out yet," he says. "But two things are perfectly clear."
"First, congress made it emphatic that these records are to be secret and confidential."
"Second, the lists will be available only to such persons or agencies as are approved by the attorney general."

It's rather funny, maybe, but already we've had quite a reaction indicating that the foreign-born themselves aren't going to be nearly as concerned about this registration as some of our own citizens are. Most of these foreign-born people are used to this sort of thing, back home.

Don't Have to Carry Cards
The whole job is going to be handled by the Postoffice Department. Veteran postal employees in all first and second class postoffices, and in all postoffices in county seat towns, will have questionnaires which each alien must answer.

Wording of these hasn't been finally determined. They'll ask the alien's name, the date and place of his entry, his nicknames or aliases, if any, his criminal record if he has one, his occupation, how long he intends to stay and what he intends to do, what societies or organizations he belongs to, and so on.

The finger-printing part of the job is rather a headache. FBI agents are preparing a set of instructions so that now-preparing to leave for Finland with British volunteers. And his romance is settled satisfactorily, although it took leap year to do it.

"The English Air" may explain some of the British attitude toward the war with Germany. Certainly it gives an adequate picture of values at stake in the European conflict.

Arsenals Handicapped by Ancient Equipment But Nearing 12,000 Garand Rifles a Month

By MAJOR PAUL L. REED
NEA Service Service Special
Correspondent

U. S. Army capacity of producing small arms—badly neglected before start of the new defense program—is expanding so rapidly that 12,000 rifles a month are in sight.

The arsenal situation as a whole, however, is not too good. Most equipment is old, has not been replaced or modernized since the World War. Many techniques are outmoded, and production "bottlenecks" hold up mass production. The army has only six arsenals.

Right now the Springfield, Mass., arsenal is manufacturing 4000 of the new semi-automatic M-1 or Garand rifles a month and this rate is being doubled immediately. Manufacture of the Garand utilizes all new equipment.

When production at the Winchester, Conn., private plant begins in October, the total will probably reach 12,000 or 15,000. And this does not take into account a third source to be added shortly, according to Chief of Staff Marshall.

Springfield Sets the Pace

The Springfield arsenal—keeping abreast of best manufacturing methods—has set a pattern for other U. S. arms plants.

A small armory was first established there in 1777 at the insistence of Col. Henry Knox, chief of artillery in Washington's army. From the beginning muskets were the principal product. The famous Springfield rifle, Model 1903, was developed and built there.

Interchangeable parts manufacture, now commonplace, was first applied to army rifles at Springfield. The arsenal there is a testing laboratory and a standard of precision parts manufacture.

Equipment at Springfield for the manufacture of rifles, machine gun and pistol parts clearly shows the effect of periodic buying and long neglect. Except for World War equipment, most heavy metal working tools are obsolete.

From 1925 to 1934 only four new machines were added to more than 1000 tools. Since 1934 approximately 275 tools have been introduced, but many operations have time orp recession, "bottlenecks" because continued use of inadequate equipment is necessary.

Watervliet arsenal in New York state is the guns factory of the Ordnance Department. It does all machining work on the army's big gun barrels and finishing operations on the 3-inch anti-aircraft gun work, but 80 per cent of the machining tools are more than 20 years old. Principal value of this arsenal to the defense program is to furnish small groups of highly trained workers to the industrial shops which will build guns and the new anti-aircraft guns.

Watertown Makes One Anti-Aircraft Gun at a Time

Frankfort arsenal in Pennsylvania manufactures small arms and artillery ammunition and fire-control instruments. Small arms manufacturing facilities are good, particularly for making .50 caliber cartridges for machine guns. Some efficient new machines have been installed for operations necessary in machining shell cases.

Watertown, Mass., arsenal builds coast defense guns and constructs mounts and does the rough work on the barrels of 3-inch anti-aircraft guns, which are then finished at Watervliet.

Watertown arsenal's equipment is large and nearly 85 per cent of it is more than 20 years old. Facilities for the anti-aircraft guns provide for only one gun at a time. Most of the army's three-inch anti-aircraft guns have been made by a private manufacturer.

Facilities for the new 37 and 90 mm. anti-aircraft guns are not yet available. But specifications are in the hands of several private manufacturers, and building will have priority in the armament program.

Albany arsenal in New Jersey does two jobs—it manufactures powder and loads shells. The powder plant, while small, has been able to maintain the most modern processes.

Shell loading, unlike most armament processes, remains largely a hand operation. This is a serious bottleneck in large scale manufacture.

Plenty of new arsenals, if fairly well equipped.

Rock Island, Ill., only arsenal not in the northeastern quarter of the nation, does two types of work. It builds tanks, armored cars and gun mounts. And it does redesigning and modernizing.

Welding fabrication to lighten gun carriages and mounts has been an outstanding example of this work. Because of World War construction, Rock Island is capable of tremendous expansion.

Because of the new defense taxes, the nation is suffering from a shortage of pennies. It wasn't so long ago when the complaint most often heard was lack of dollars.

Father Must Face Grim Fact That Sons May Have to Fight

By RUTH MILLETT

You are the father of a young son who is almost through with his education, almost ready to step into your profession.

When he talks about the future and the possibility of war—how do you answer him?

Do you encourage him to feel sorry for himself, to see troubled and dangerous times as a personal threat to happiness? So that his happiness, his comfort and his future are, in his eyes, the things that are at stake?

Or do you try to encourage him in a belief that how one is to live may be more important than living itself; that some things are worth any sacifice; that men, occasionally, must put duty and devotion and loyalty before personal happiness?

If you are encouraging in him the second attitude, you are doing your part to make him strong. You are doing your part to make him see that he must accept his responsibilities as a strong, young man—the type of citizen on whom a country must depend for protection and strength.

Of course, secretly, you may not get

Safety Job Drives Launched by Clubs

Seventy Thousand Women Enter Safety Campaign

By ADELAIDE KERR
AP Feature Service Writer

Seventy thousand women—members of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs—have launched a campaign to prevent discrimination against married women workers.

Under the direction of Dr. Minnie L. Massett, they are peppering the country with circulars, making contracts with congressmen to present their side of the case, and working overtime to educate their members on the subject.

They have been spurred into increasingly energetic action this year by the fact that since January, 1939, legislatures of 26 states have introduced bills aimed at prohibiting the employment of married women in state or private enterprise. (The bills failed to pass, but they put the federation on guard for a spirited defense of "the married women's right to work.")

Need the Money

Here are some of the federation's arguments based on a survey of a cross-section of its membership made public recently by Dr. Ruth Shalleross, director of the federation's research department.

The questionnaires revealed that the federation's married members work, not to satisfy a whim, but because they need money to support parents or relatives, to improve their standards of living, to educate children, get out of debt or to save for their old age. Others work because their husbands lost their jobs, became ill or wanted their help in his business.

One of the federation's strongest defenses of the married woman's right to work is its contention by working they have more money to spend on household equipment, electrical appliances and clothes and thus increase business.

Spread Employment

Here is about the way the married women worker spends her money: "Many of the married members began working during the depression to maintain their homes which otherwise would have been lost with the curtailment of the husband's earnings. By maintaining their homes they purchase repairs and household equipment to a larger degree than would otherwise have been the case. By working, they hired household help, thus relieving the unskilled labor market, where competition is very acute. They kept the family income much comfort from the attitude you are fostering in your son.

You love him dearly.

"He Is the Future to You"

He is the future to you—the future that holds your hopes and your ambitions. You want him to have a better chance than you had; to make better use of his opportunities than you were able to make of yours.

You want him to have a good life and to have his chance at success and happiness. Of course, you do.

Unfortunately, your going to war twenty years ago, so that the world would be safe for this son of yours, was not enough. You thought it would be. But the world is not yet a safe place for democracy.

And so your son, and perhaps his son, for how many generations you do not know, must be ready and willing to fight for democracy—as willing as you were.

To prevent these women from maintaining their standard of living would have resulted mostly in equalizing property or making subsistence the basis for their employment. This would have curtailed their purchasing power for all products except bare necessities."

The report states that the average married woman worker who is a federation member has no children under sixteen, is between forty and forty-nine years old, started work because of the depression, lives in her own home and earns some $300 less annually than the unmarried working women, because she is not so well trained and has not worked for so long.

Newspapers Commend Governor Bailey and His Program---

Excerpts From Editorials Give Cross Section of Public Opinion

From the White County Record:

Even his opposition has found no grounds for the slightest hint that in his frequent journeys to other sections of the country, Governor Bailey has failed to show a talent for focusing the light of favorable publicity, both upon himself and upon the state which he has represented. Press reports and the position he holds in the opinions of men of national political and economic importance confirm the success of those gubernatorial invasions of the North and East. In Governor Bailey, Arkansas has a governor who knows how and who enters the most inaccessible of national inner chambers.

From the El Dorado Daily News:

Governor Bailey was entirely right recently when he stated that the failure of the refunding act was the cause of the State's inability to build roads and the only way money for building roads can be provided is through refunding of the State's bonds.

From the Texarkana Gazette:

In a recent statement to the press, Governor Bailey said that he had not yet arrived at a decision as to whether he would be a candidate for re-election.

This is a decision in which the governor, in some measure at least, will undoubtedly be guided by the advice of his friends and various business interests of the State interested in Arkansas's development. To those, however, who have the best interest of the State at heart, both from the standpoint of Arkansas keeping abreast of the present civic consciousness of the duty of a state in education, caring for the wards of the State, fostering its industrial and agricultural advancement as well as its conservation of resources, it should be clear that the best interests of Arkansas require that Governor Bailey should be re-elected.

From the Hot Springs New Era:

The New Era is pleased to note that Governor Carl E. Bailey and members of the commission are doing everything within their power as Arkansas representatives to keep pace with the general movement for freight rate relief in the Southland.

From the Arkansas Democrat:

All too often former residents of Arkansas have little to say in praise of the State, in fact, generally condemn it. But there is at least one man, now living at Lakewood, O., who is proud of our efforts to pay our debts, to stand as an example economy. He is S. E. Kent, and, in a letter to the editor of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, he reminds that Arkansas is making remarkable strides in setting its financial house in order and is applying constructive methods of financing in reducing its burden of debt.

Giving much of the credit for these achievements to Governor Bailey Mr. Kent says: "He has unfailingly devoted himself to this end, and his efforts seem to be bearing fruit. Press reports recently state that he has succeeded in interesting bankers in underwriting the refunding of Arkansas's highway indebtedness into lower interest bonds."

Whether you do or do not agree that Governor Bailey's refunding program is sound, you will agree that such publicity is of tremendous value to the State. Less than 10 years ago we were pointed to as repudiators of our debts. Today we are being cited as an example which the federal government and many other states well might follow.

From the Arkansas Gazette:

It must be apparent to all that Governor Bailey's whole concern, and his whole personal and public interest will lie in obtaining the largest possible reduction in the average rate on the highway debt.

From the Jonesboro Daily Tribune:

Governor Bailey made a stirring speech Saturday night. It was a fighting, defiant message which renewed his challenge to those who oppose him to attack the effectiveness of any phase of his administration's service to the people.

It seems, after a careful and detailed study of the opening campaign addresses of both Governor Bailey and his principal opponent, that the opposition will need to muster more powerful ammunition than it has used as yet if its effort to defeat the Governor is to meet with success.

This assumption, of course, is based on the premise that the people of Arkansas are intelligent enough and interested enough in their state's welfare to disregard glittering generalities and sanguine promises and to insist upon a searching exploration of the facts by those who would have their favor at the polls.

There are those, and some of them fancy themselves realists, who maintain that votes are gained by appeals to prejudice and bigotry rather than to intelligence and a disinterested appraisal of facts.

The Tribune never has and does not now subscribe to this doctrine of despair.

Admitting that far too many votes are controlled in this fashion, this paper still maintains that, generally speaking, elections are won by those who, first of all, have public records worth talking about, and secondly, present those records most skillfully and adequately to the largest number of qualified electors.

Pursuing this line of reasoning to its logical conclusion, Governor Bailey certainly enjoys an enormous advantage over Mr. Adkins. The Governor's remarks were punctuated by no such studiously prolonged and conventionally treacherous references to the "Great-a-a-t Amerikan Pee-e-ful" as disgusted those who sat at their radio sets and endured the so-called oratory of the recent national conventions.

The Governor speaks with conviction, to be sure, but his speech was refreshingly free of the time-worn cliché and the threadbare bromide of the professional political pragmatist.

This newspaper is compelled to believe that the people of Arkansas will continue to endorse a man who compliments their intelligence by daring to address them in passably good English and to deal in facts and figures rather than the standard stock in trade of the average candidate for public office.

From the Helena World:

Even if, two years hence, we should know that we would not support Governor Carl E. Bailey's candidacy for the United States Senate, in the event he becomes a candidate, still we would feel it incumbent upon us at this time to urge his election.

None denies that he has given Arkansas a good administration, so we can be sure that the State won't suffer under his continued leadership.

From the Rogers Daily News:

A careful reading of Homer Adkins' opening address in his candidacy for governor reveals that he could advance no progressive ideas for state government not already embraced in Gov. Carl E. Bailey's program. The only worth-while point of difference is that he wants the job of refunding instead of letting the governor carry through.

From the Hot Springs Sentinel Record:

Arkansas muffed one of its greatest opportunities at the time of the special session, but it probably will not be too late to retrieve in some measure that error after the next general election. In any event, Governor Bailey is more familiar with the refunding matter than any other citizen in the state, is thoroughly committed to its necessity, and has devoted great energy and effort to carrying it through.

From the Sebastian County News:

The record of Governor Bailey we all know, and we need not dwell on that subject at this time. Bailey, known as the "progressive governor," has made an enviable record of improvement and progress in the State.

From the Van Buren Press-Argus:

(Whose editor, brother of a federal internal revenue employee, is antagonistic to the governor.)

In many respects, Governor Bailey has been a progressive governor. At the University he has ably carried to completion the giant building program started by the late President J. C. Futrell and the late Senator Robinson, and Senator Hattie W. Caraway, and former Governor J. M. Futrell. He has carried to completion the work of building a bigger and better state sanatorium at Booneville. He has built as many highways as funds have permitted. Improvements have been made at the State Capitol under his administration. He probably, himself, is sincere in his wishes to refinance the highway debt; and there is no doubt that he is working on a great project in getting an adjustment on freight rates. He has done much to advertise the State in a notable manner.

From the Batesville News Review:

To our mind one vital conclusion came out of the Governor's message. It was simply this: It would be folly for the voters of Arkansas to remove from office the man who has managed the affairs of the State more successfully than any other Governor we have had and give his gigantic tasks into the inexperienced hands of one who has shown no capacity whatever for the exacting duties of the governor's office.

From the Baxter Bulletin, Mountain Home:

The things that we have to have under this coming administration to move ahead are:

A workman's compensation law. Capital will not come into this section under the present damage suit racket hazard.

Balanced freight rates. Rates in and out of this section that are competitive with other sections. Road bond refunding, which would allow us to match government funds and build new highways.

Since Carl Bailey has been governor he has worked harder than any governor we ever had to give us these essential things.

From the Imboden Journal:

While the political policies of Governor Bailey are questioned by many people, it can hardly be denied that he is making the State a good governor. The bills lately enacted by the legislature are for the most part of a constructive nature, and will prove for the best interests of the State.

From the Forrest City Crowley Ridge Chronicle:

It appears to us that Mr. Adkins is less interested in obtaining disinterested and capable counsel than in ringing in his own crowd to handle the State's refinancing of highway bonds.

Reyburn to Vote for Mr. Willkie

Arkansan Reports East Swinging to Republican

LITTLE ROCK — Sam W. Reyburn, former Arkansas business leader who is president of the Associated Dry Goods Corporation, New York, said Sunday he will support Wendell L. Willkie, the Republican nominee, for president.

Many regular Democrats in the East intend to vote for Mr. Willkie. He has a good chance to carry New York, President Roosevelt's home state.

Mr. Reyburn, who is making a short visit here, The New York business executive, who moved from Little Rock in 1914, displayed keen interest upon being informed that a Pulaski County Willkie Democratic Club will be organized at the Hotel Marion Monday night. He asked several questions about the club, which will not accept Republicans as members.

"In my opinion," Mr. Reyburn said, "Willkie is the best equipped candidate for the presidency I have had a chance to support since Grover Cleveland last ran for that office. His character, ability, energy, originality and courage are all outstanding."

"Fortunately," he has gotten a wide and deep view of American civilization without following office-holding as a vocation.

"A politician must develop a keen foresight of the drift of public opinion, and when he has developed and appraised that, research and analysis stop. There's no future need to think through to fundamental principles. Too often, to be successful, he must try for a special advantage rather than for what is universally right. A long practical experience in politics is not apt to make a first class chief executive, even though it might better equip one in a purely administrative office."

"With advancement and success, leaders naturally become self-centered and develop an egotism that leads them to believe they know everything and have become indispensable."

"Willkie, without wealth or influence, has risen to the top place in management where it has been necessary to have good plans and materials and the ability to lead other men and women in the essential activities of production and distribution of goods and services. He has had to face adversity by seeking the truth and cold, hard facts for the foundation on which he has built. With his attitude and this experience, with the patience, sympathy and natural courtesy Mr. Willkie possesses, he has ready access to the minds and feelings of other people and is a convincing teacher and leader."

everyone else who has studied the subject. But I am against the refunding bill on which the voters of Arkansas will pass in November. I am against it with all my energy, thought and resources.

"The record on this question shows that the present Governor is solely responsible for the state's failure to refund this indebtedness at favorable interest rates and upon terms acceptable to the people of the state. Let us examine the record."

"In 1937 the Governor offered to the legislature a bill for refunding. This bill would have given him full and exclusive power to refund the debt by private sale at any rate of interest less than now being paid, add upon such conditions and terms as might be agreed upon in secret negotiations, behind closed doors."

"The legislature, believing that this was more power than an honest man would want, and more than any other should have, refused to enact such legislation. A refunding board then was provided for and the bill was passed. Nothing further was done about refunding until 1939, when the Governor undertook to make up the deficiency in the 1937 act by issuing an executive order. The Supreme Court held the order void because the Governor had usurped powers conferred solely upon the General Assembly by the Constitution."

The Governor then called the Legislature into special session to enact into law the provisions of his, automatic executive order. He was able to push this legislation through. This new act did not fix the rate of interest, nor set forth many other important terms and conditions of the proposed refunding.

Non-Callible Bonds

"The act provided that our already high motor and gasoline taxes were frozen at their present rates, unless highway revenues amounts to $15,000,000 per annum for three consecutive years. The act made the bonds non-callible. Realizing that the people of this state would not accept nor approve a refunding act which failed to provide for a public sale of the bonds, and did not fix the interest rates and many other terms and provisions of refunding, and which left so much to be determined through private and secret negotiations behind closed doors, the Governor forced the adoption of an emergency clause to this act. This clause was designed to deprive the people of the right to say whether or not they wanted refunding under such an act. The Supreme Court held that the voters, under the Constitution, could not be deprived of this right. In a very short while, after the Legislature had adjourned, more than 14,000 voters from all walks of life and sections of the state disapproved the act by signing petitions to refer it. There the matter stands at the November election."

"I repeat that the Governor's determination for secrecy in refunding is solely responsible for the fact that the bonds have not been refunded."

Road Construction

"As your Governor it will be my purpose, as rapidly as possible, to close up unpaved links in our main highways, and to secure improved farm-to-market roads. At the same time, I am not going to make a lot of promises along this line, promises which I know and you know cannot be fulfilled. The one pledge which I can give you is that I will cooperate in every way possible with the United States Bureau of Roads to see that Arkansas gets its full share of highway improvements and I also can pledge that funds made available for highway construction will be handled honestly, efficiently and economically and with a view of giving the greatest service to the greatest number."

Old Age Pensions

"Nor must we forget our duty to the aged. Along this line Arkansas has a shameful record. As you know, the government matches the funds appropriated by each state for old age pensions. This is done for 48 states and the territories of Alaska and Hawaii. On this list, according to figures available April 15, 1940, Arkansas stands fiftieth, or at the bottom.

"As of April 15, Arkansas appropriated an average of $3 a month for 18,341 aged persons. A few weeks ago this was increased to an average of $3.75 to 19,001 old age pensioners. The government furnished an equal amount. Therefore, the average old age pensioner in Arkansas receives $7.50 a month. What about our neighboring Texas, with nearly six times as many pensioners, paid $9.40 each; Oklahoma, with four times as many pensioners, paid $17.62 each; Missouri, with twice as many pensioners, paid $17.40 each; Louisiana, with 31,479 pensioners, paid $11.88 each. The national average was $20.00."

"From the figures given, you will notice that Arkansas, which is a poor state economically, is penalized by the government because it cannot match government funds. In Illinois, with 147,779 old age pensioners, each receives $20.53; in California each of the 135,911 old age pensioners gets $38.01 a month. The average old age pension in all the states is $20.00 a month, of which the government pays half. In other words, the government is paying an average of $10.00 a month to each old age pensioner, while in Arkansas it pays only $3.75. It is my purpose to do all in my power to have Arkansas placed on a plane with the average state, and to secure appropriations from the Social Security Board of at least $10.00 for each pensioner, in addition to the state appropriation. The aged persons of Arkansas are just as worthy and in just as great need as those of other states."

"The 'Shakedown' is the invention and product of the racketeer. In some of the larger cities of our country, men and women are forced to pay assessments to gangster leaders to do business or earn a living. No tax collector is more persistent in getting revenue than are these racketeers, or agents of the underworld. The penalty for failure to make payments of assessments is loss of the right to work or to do business."

"This 'shakedown' system has been established among those on the pay rolls of the state of Arkansas. During the campaign, state employees are expected to devote a good part of their time and effort—which you and I as taxpayers are buying—to promote the interest of the men in office. They also are 'invited' to contribute to campaign expenses. That invitation, in reality, amounts to a command. Refusal to pay and to perform brings its penalty—loss of a job. Working for the state at small salaries are widows who are the sole support of little children or other dependents. Working for the state also as small salaries, are men who have large families to support. To those alike has gone the word that assessments for campaign purposes—suggested to be 3 per cent of a whole year's salary—should be paid. Their jobs depend upon it. They must pay, even though children go hungry, lack clothing and need medical care. They must pay, even though some of them have to go to the bank and borrow it."

"I tell you, my friends, this vicious system must be uprooted from Arkansas politics. We must do away with the 'shakedown.' We must throw around these low-salaried, helpless employees of the state the protection they deserve. As your governor, I will urge the legislature to enact a measure which will kill this 'shakedown' system at its root, and which will prevent any candidate for governor from forcing state employees to contribute to campaign funds."

"I will go further—I will urge passage of a measure which will make it impossible for the Welfare and Health Departments of the state, as well as their clients, to be used as

Clash of Bearden

while he was in the legislature, I tell you I was disappointed in that boy."

As to highways, Mr. Bearden said that Mr. Weisenberger did nothing to help the county get any share of the road money as he had promised to do in the campaign two years ago.

"Anyone can do something to get roads if they want to bad enough, and I am the man to do that for you," said Mr. Bearden.

In attacking the incumbent's actions regarding old age pension legislation, the ex-sheriff cited Mr. Weisenberger's negative vote on House Bill No. 666 which would have levied a tax of two cents per thousand cubic feet on natural gas, to be paid by the corporations and not by the consumer. He said that had this bill been passed about three million dollars annually would have been provided the state to take care of crippled children, unemployed and old people. He further said that his opponent had been hired by the people of the county to represent them in the legislature but had sold them out to a lobbyist for the gas corporations who promised to make him (Weisenberger) a corporation lawyer.

Mr. Bearden also accused his opponent of having declared himself "dry" during the last campaign and then sold out to the "wet" forces of the county because they needed "some one to hold John Vesey's feet to the fire."

"He went up there to Little Rock and on one measure he voted 'dry' with Mr. Vesey. And, then later he voted 'wet' on a bill that would have put the state in the liquor business."

"No, I have only one purpose in asking that you send me to the legislature and that is to serve. And I promise you good people that if you see fit to vote for me you will have no cause to regret such action."

Mr. Weisenberger then took his place before the microphone. He stated that it was at Patmos that it was finally arranged for his name to be placed on the county ticket.

"I want to tell you honestly and sincerely," he continued, "that I accepted nothing for my services but the $1,000 (representative's salary) and that I came back to you as clean as when you sent me to the legislature."

"I made you only one promise before, that I would attend all sessions, committee meetings and roll calls, and I did so as far as was humanly possible. I can honestly declare that there was no first-term representative there who fought harder for the people than the red-headed country boy from Hempstead county."

He stated that it was his colleague, John Vesey, and himself who introduced the auto-testing repeal bill in the house and that he fought for and helped pass the Rozell & Milam bills to increase the county equalization fund to help the schools.

On the highway question he reported that he had tried to get through a bill that would have turned back to the counties one-quarter of a cent per gallon of gasoline tax for use on farm to market roads. That bill went through the house and the senate but was never signed into a law.

"In regard to old age pensions I told you two years ago that I favored the searching out of all the old, the crippled and the underprivileged and giving them their fair share before we increased the pension of anyone. In the last legislature there was cut from the welfare department operating budget $332,000, and there are more old people today drawing more money in pensions than ever before."

"But this is not enough. I voted to give more of the sales tax to the welfare department and to likewise use the liquor and beer tax for the purpose of paying these unfortunate a pension. The latter tax has been used to pay for the building of the state tuberculosis sanatorium which was dedicated early this month. Now I am advocating, probably for the first time in the state, that this revenue be diverted to the welfare department and no increase of taxes will be necessary to take care of this growing need."

In closing Mr. Weisenberger stated that he had several copies of the legislative journal, which he was instrumental in getting printed, and that he would be glad to loan them to anyone interested in pursuing his record as a member of the legislature.

Other Candidates

Other candidates speaking before noon were those seeking the office of treasurer. Incumbents without opposition who made brief announcements were State Senator James Pilkinton (holderover), Sheriff C. E. Baker, and Tax Assessor Dewey Hendrix. County Judge Frank Rider, who is not a candidate, also had a few words to say.

Dinner was served by the women of Patmos at 25 cents per plate to a very appreciative crowd.

Immediately after luncheon John Wilson, Luther Higginson and Fred Luck made short speeches in their own behalf for the office of county judge. Following them were the two candidates for the No. 1 representative post, Hugh Clark and Talbot Field, Jr., who concluded the day's program.

Monday the candidates are in Spring Hill, and on Tuesday move to the north end of the county at McCaskill, and then over to Ozon on Wednesday.

And so they had played and sailed and dug in the sand, until suddenly they were grown up. He was at Harvard and she was standing with him on the bank of the Charles, watching their sculls nose out a win. She was dancing with him at a prom, her pretty face upturned to his. She was saying as they walked out into the moonlight, "Why is everything I do with you such fun, Johnny?" And because the moon was pointing its silver finger from behind the ivy-covered corner of a building, making a fairyland of the whole yard, he had answered, "I feel the same way, Jean." He had kissed the small flower that was her mouth, smoothed the sweet curls of her hair.

She had looked up at him with shining eyes, "Oh, Johnny, this is what I've hoped for. And on our wedding day I want you and a prayer book and the cameo—no orchids or champagne or cake, with a silly little bride and groom on top."

The Reynolds came, prized possession of her family, was a priceless bit of stone and gold fashioned by artists. And Jean wanted Johnny and the cameo on her wedding day.

STANDING in the doorway of his shop, decorated so festively with its strings of lacquered gourds, Johnny hated himself. He wished a surgeon's knife could have cut out of his heart all of the uncertainty, to leave him feeling about Jean as he had that night one year ago.

He wanted love, but a love more sweeping than the mere comfort he felt in her presence. Once she had said, "Love comes in like the tide." He wanted a love to come in that way, sweepingly and overpoweringly.

The bell on the handle of his shop door jangled, and he walked to greet a customer.

"Nice day," he said, professionally.

"Ummmm," she acquiesced and smiled.

Johnny's throat contracted as started at her. This was why he had known her and Jean were washed up! This was the girl he had known in his dreams, a tall blond reed of a girl. He wanted to say, "You're poetry by Yeats. You're music by Chopin. You're a sunset with nymphs by Fragonard."

But he only said, "Nice day," and watched her as she roamed about the shop, reading the rhymes he'd written for his wares. He watched her and wondered where she belonged in Capetown's assortment of summer people. The tide had come in, as Jean had predicted. He was in love.

"Anything in particular you wanted to see?" Johnny asked.

"Yes, and no," she glanced at Johnny, and he noted that her eyes were the deep blue of violets, not the trusting brown spaniel ones Jean had turned up to him, "I want to borrow an old lamp for our set in the next play."

"So that's it," Johnny said, with relief.

"What do you mean? Oh, we'll give your shop credit for any props we borrow. It'll be good advertising."

She sat down on the old sea chest in front of the window.

"Don't stare so. You make me feel like a ghost."

He hadn't realized he was staring, but he amended hastily: "No ghost, but a dream. You make such a nice picture, sitting on my sea chest. I'd like to use you in a window display."

Her laugh, too, belonged to Johnny's dream, a deep, melodious sound of bells ringing.

"Sorry," she said, "but I'm a window display somewhere else. That's what summer theaters are. This summer I intend to meet everyone who's important theatrically. I'm tired of dramatic schools and apprenticeships. I intend to go places on Broadway."

"All of you do. I've spent every summer since I was 6 watching the sweet young things from Carter Earl's theater fret their way upon the stage."

"And then be seen no more?"
